for the farmer.

STORING POTATOES.—Experience has proved to every potatoe raiser, that the practice of digging them up in the morning, and leaving them on the ground, exposed to the heat of the sun during the day, is a very injurious one. Though potatoes are provided with eyes, it is better if they never see the light. Potatoes that have become heated in the sun are exceedingly liable to rot; but even if they even escape this their healthfulness and nutritive qualities are greatly impaired. In some sections of Ireland the custom prevails of putting the potatoes into a covered top immediately after being dug

The dryer the atmosphere is, and the colder-provided it is above the freezing point-the beter it will be for keeping potatoes. If placed in such an atmosphere, they will show no tendency to sprout or rot for years, nor CLEARFIELD PLANING MILL can they be distinguished from fresh dug potatoes. All changes of temperature or of the degree of moisture are unfavorable to the keeping of potatoes.

A very good method of keeping them in small quantities, as for family use, is to assort them into barrels, fill the interstices with sun dried sand, and then cover the tops of the barrels with the best and latest improved with nicely fitted tufts. If kept in this manner, they are not likely to become shriveled, and will retain the freshness of recently dug potatoes till late in the season after they are dug. They will also show very little disposition to sprout. If farmers are not provided with suitable cellars for storing potatoas, then they are best preserved by making heaps of them on the top of the ground, and cover them over with straw and earth. If this method is adopted care should be taken to cut a small drain around the heap, through which the surplus water may pass off and to provide a means of ventilating the heap during the warm weather that often occurs in the West, even during the winter. For this purpose it is well to make a tube of boards, about six inches square, which will reach from the bottom of the heap, and which will extend a foot or two above the outer surface. The part placed beneath the covering should be perforated with auger holes. The top should also be closed by means of an end piece, thro' which should be a two inch hole, to be closed at pleasure by the means of a

Farmers who live in the vicinity of a sand bank, will probably find it will pay to excavate a suitable space in it for storing potatoes, and to secure it from caving in by means of a rude box. In some portions of New England, potatoes are stored in this way, even by farmers who have good cellars .- Prairie Farmer.

MAKING SAURKRAUT .- As several ladies within the past two weeks have desired us to republish our recipe for making this much esteemed dish by many persons, we herewith comply with their request, in order that it may be in time for this years crop of cabbages. It is this: In the first place let your "stand," holding from a half barrel to a barrel, be thoroughly scalded out; the cutter, the tub and the stamper also well scalded. Take off all the outer leaves of the cebbage, halve them, remove the heart, and pro ceed with the cutting. Lay some clean leaves at the bottom of the stand, sprinkle with a handful of salt, fill in a half bushel of the cut cabbage, stamp gently until the juice just begins to make its appearance, then add another handfull of salt, and so on until the stand is full. Cover over with cabbage leaves, place on top a clean board fitting the space pretty well, and on the top of that a stone weighing twelve or fifteen pounds. Stand away in a cool place, and when hard freezing comes on remove to the cellar. It will be ready for use in from four to six weeks. The cabbage should be cut tolerably coarse. The savoy variety makes the best article, but it is only half as productive as the Drumhead and Flat Dutch .- Germantown Telegraph.

MAKING CIDER .- Some farmers are of the opinion that anything in the shape of apples is good enough to make cider, as that will work itself clear in the end. It is true cider can be made of wormy, rotton and dirty apples, but these conditions can hardly fail to affect its quality. If apples were selected with proper care and ground in a clean state there is no doubt but the cider would be much better than it generally is. Some people grind the apples and immediately put them in the pomace to press. This is wrongat least the eider will not be as finely flavored as it would be were the poinace left in the vat half a day or more before being put up in the cheese and subject to pressure.
